Stained Glass Doors - Fine Details

Decorative Glass Design and Restoration

Decorative glass often plays an indispensable role when considering an authentic period restoration. The architects of the Victorian and Edwardian eras relied on both etched and stained glass to enhance their elegant doors and help create a statement all about atmosphere and visual impact.

Over the years, a great deal of the original glass in town house doors has been discarded, replaced by inappropriate and often vulgar modern obscure glass.

Reclaimed and sympathetically restored stained glass panels provide both an attractive as well as practical alternative.

The right stained glass panel can transform the appearance of your home both from outside and within.

Technical Details

We restore leaded lights or where possible reproduce designs using traditional techniques and materials. Patiently going through the process of creating panels which are hand painted in specialised 'stains' and kiln fired for permanence.

We refer to an extensive pattern book, photos of past work and a fund of knowledge and experience to draw on. We can reproduce existing panels or produce a stunning design of your own choice.

Traditional lead lights are often glazed in vulnerable and critical areas - doors, sidelights, and at low levels. We ensure our new panes are sized to meet building regulations. We are unique in providing a panel where traditional stained glass, lead lights and toughened glazing work together.

With over 1000 doors in stock ranging from 18th C Oak country cottage, Georgian, Edwardian and Victorian and many more unusual and ornate designs we have the one of the largest ranges available, for you to choose the door to suit your style and make an impression to your visitors.
